Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue provides urban scholars with a platform for empirical studies on urbanization and city development in China's transition. Specific attention is paid to the emerging patterns of urban growth, market forces in city dynamics, and their connection to institutional changes and policy reform. The Special Issue also publishes empirical papers with significant policy implications.

Research Topics include but are not limited to:

- Market forces in urbanization and city development;
- Emerging patterns in city growth;
- Land reforms in urbanization;
- Urban housing and rural-urban migration;
- Public financing, urban infrastructure, and off-budgeting.
