Celebrating World Food Day— Rural Economic Transformation and the Green Development of Agriculture in Developing Countries

Message from the Guest Editors

The objective of this Special Issue is to commemorate World Food Day by highlighting cutting-edge research articles and comprehensive review papers that explore the path and consequences of and policies for rapid, inclusive and sustainable rural economic transformation, food security and the green development of agriculture in developing countries. Rural economic transformation involves rising agricultural productivity and the commercialization and diversification of agricultural production patterns and livelihoods, which also includes expanded off-farm employment of rural labor. This Special Issue, intended for a wide and multidisciplinary audience, presents some of the most recent advances and novel approaches exploring the nature of rural economic transformation (e.g., the stages and speed of rural transformation), the consequences of rural economic transformation (e.g., food security, growth, inclusivity and sustainability), the green development of agriculture and institutions, policies and investments to facilitate rapid, inclusive and sustainable rural transformation, food security and the green growth of agriculture in developing countries.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Land is the only open access journal covering all aspects of land science, and it is a pioneering platform for publishing on land system science. Our editorial board is comprised of eminent scholars. We publish high quality research on societally relevant, emerging and innovative topics and results in land system research. It is now one of the top land journals with a significant impact factor, and has a goal to become the best journal in land in the coming years. I strongly recommend Land for your best research publications for a fast dissemination of your research.
