Land Management Practices for Enhancing Ecosystem Services: Cases and Experiences

Message from the Guest Editors

Ecosystem services (ESs) are vital for human well-being, providing benefits like biodiversity, food and water security, climate regulation, and cultural enrichment. However, climate change and land use changes have led to a decline in ES supply while demand has risen, disrupting the balance. The Special Issue "Land Management Practices for Enhancing Ecosystem Services: Cases and Experiences" aims to explore strategies for sustainable land management to maintain and enhance ESs. It seeks manuscripts on quantifying ESs, land use changes, trade-offs, management practices, socio-economic integration, challenges, and land use efficiency. The goal is to advance knowledge on land management's role in sustaining ecosystem health and productivity.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Land is the only open access journal covering all aspects of land science, and it is a pioneering platform for publishing on land system science. Our editorial board is comprised of eminent scholars. We publish high quality research on societally relevant, emerging and innovative topics and results in land system research. It is now one of the top land journals with a significant impact factor, and has a goal to become the best journal in land in the coming years. I strongly recommend Land for your best research publications for a fast dissemination of your research.
