Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

This Special Issue is intended to be a highly selective collection of empirical studies adopting quantitative and qualitative paradigms or survey studies on issues of learning Chinese as a first or a second language. It represents cutting-edge research which is theoretically motivated with empirical data and diverse research methods to yield findings that provide a broader understanding of the acquisition of Chinese.

Possible topics include but are not limited to: cognitive aspects of Chinese L1 and L2 acquisition, psychological and social-contextual aspects of Chinese language acquisition, Chinese heritage language learners, and classroom-based acquisition research.

We look forward to receiving your submissions!
