Romance Historical Syntax: Special Issue on Syntactic Analyzability in Diachrony

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue seeks to expand our empirical and theoretical understanding of syntactic analyzability in diachrony by bringing together researchers on historical romance syntax working within different frameworks. We welcome contributions addressing any of questions in any Romance languages and varieties and from any theoretical perspective. Papers exploring, testing, and revisiting the conceptual/theoretical implications of the historical loss of syntactic analyzability with new empirical evidence are of particular interest, regardless of the categorial nature of the elements involved.

Contributions from a single theoretical approach are welcome; (single- or co-authored) papers that combine or discuss formal and functionalist analyses are highly encouraged. Tentative completion schedule:

- Abstract submission deadline: 17 February 2025
- Notification of abstract acceptance: 2 April 2025
- Full manuscript deadline: 21 October 2025
