Disparities of Justice: Unequal Outcomes, Racial and Gender Bias, and Law in the Twenty-First Century

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue aims to bring together multidisciplinary, transdisciplinary, and interdisciplinary research exploring the ways in which racial identity, gender identity, ethnic identity, and other social identities, and the nexus of said identities, shape disparities affecting all aspects of twenty-first century life in the United States and beyond. As such, this Special Issue aims to highlight how disparities of justice reflect linguistic, ethno-racial/ethnic, and gender biases within the criminal justice system, the law enforcement system, and within the administrative nation state. With “disparities of justice” as a guiding framework, this Special Issue seeks to further unpack the connections across unequal outcomes.

In this Special Issue, original research articles and reviews are welcome. Research areas may include (but are not limited to) the following: unequal outcomes emerging from all aspects of law (e.g., criminal, administrative, election, human rights, family, environmental, employment, housing, and health care law).

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Laws is an international, open access journal featuring rigorous scholarship on critical developments in governance, courts, agencies, and social order. Analysis and synthesis, theory and practice, and empirical and doctrinal work have appeared in the journal; contributions that bridge these traditional boundaries are particularly welcome. The social sciences and humanities generate insights both from and for the legal system. While theory grounds Laws in a timeless dialogue shaped by traditions of inquiry, legal practice ensures that scholars are addressing pressing problems. Both normative and positive scholarship can aid policymakers, judges, and agency officials. Laws brings together the work of theorists and practitioners, and a diverse range of empirical researchers, to promote the progress of foundational legal norms.
