

Special Issue

Criminal Justice: Rights and Practice

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue of Laws will focus on the activities of and links between the various elements of the criminal justice system when dealing with criminal justice activities. It will also focus on issues of rights in contemporary society. The Special Issue will include contributions from academics who have also worked as practitioners in the various fields of criminal justice and legal work. These interesting perspectives will provide the reader with a great deal of expert research from a combination of the academic and practitioner viewpoints.

- Focus: This Special Issue will focus on criminal justice and rights cases from the perspectives of those who have combined professional activity within the criminal justice system and research from their academic careers.
- Scope: The scope of the Special Issue will be broad in order to capture the disparate activities and academic backgrounds of contributors who have a combination of academic and practitioner work across the criminal justice system.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Laws is an international, open access journal featuring rigorous scholarship on critical developments in governance, courts, agencies, and social order. Analysis and synthesis, theory and practice, and empirical and doctrinal work have appeared in the journal; contributions that bridge these traditional boundaries are particularly welcome. The social sciences and humanities generate insights both from and for the legal system. While theory grounds Laws in a timeless dialogue shaped by traditions of inquiry, legal practice ensures that scholars are addressing pressing problems. Both normative and positive scholarship can aid policymakers, judges, and agency officials. Laws brings together the work of theorists and practitioners, and a diverse range of empirical researchers, to promote the progress of foundational legal norms.
