Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

There has been rapid growth in our knowledge of breast cancer biology and molecular genetics, which has led to a better understanding of this heterogeneous disease, both in terms of its progression as well as improved treatment modalities. Advances in our understanding have facilitated the development of targeted therapy as well as new therapeutic strategies that have greatly improved disease outcome as well as survival.

Understanding, dissecting and connecting novel breast cancer mechanistic networks requires multidisciplinary approaches. This Special Issue, “Drug Resistance, Molecular Oncology and Genetics of Breast Cancer”, provides the opportunity for scientists and clinicians to present research articles as well as reviews on cutting-edge discoveries in the field of mechanisms underlying breast cancer pathogenesis and therapeutic strategies aimed at targeting deregulated signaling pathways in breast cancer.
