Message from the Guest Editor

Over the course of the pandemic, people of all ages reported symptoms consistent with anxiety and depression, regardless of severity of any viral infection. Additionally, increasing evidence of post-COVID long-term effects has been reported in the literature. Long COVID describes a range of symptoms, including fatigue, dyspnea, brain fog, and mental health disorders.

COVID is becoming endemic, which means that we will live with it as we do with the flu. However, while some countries have reported a decline in COVID-19 cases and deaths, largely due to high vaccination coverage, there is still a relevant public health concern about refugees and unvaccinated people in many developing countries. The behaviour we all exhibit and the epidemiology of the virus itself are extremely important. New SARS-CoV-2 variants show increasing levels of concern and are likely to impact the epidemiological situation worldwide.

This Special Issue aims to provide a collection of high-quality data and new insights into COVID-19. We invite healthcare professionals and researchers involved in COVID-19 to submit original research articles or reviews to Life.
