Message from the Guest Editor

This second volume of this Special Issue follows on from the success of the first, we invite you to publish your research in this edition of “Current Research on Dermatology: Pathology, Clinical Manifestation, Investigation and Therapy” (https://www.mdpi.com/journal/life/special_issues/Dermatology_

Considering recent advances in the field, dermatovenerology has proven to be a specialty of clinical, investigative, and therapeutic interest. Cutaneous skin diseases vary in appearance, evolution, and prognosis as well as in their response to various treatments. Novel treatments are now available for various skin conditions, including surgical, cosmetic, and physiotherapeutic procedures. Drugs of both plant and chemical origin can produce systemic or adverse skin reactions. If classical therapy is ineffective or is not tolerated, off-the-label drugs or complementary and alternative medicine methods can be used as part of an integrative medicine treatment. This Special Issue of Life will collect and present data on the latest developments in the field.
