The Impact of Onconutraceuticals as Potential Oncological Strategy

Message from the Guest Editors

Onconutraceuticals emerge as a possible complementary strategy, capable of targeting specific molecular pathways that regulate cell proliferation, apoptosis, angiogenesis, and the inflammatory response, which are key processes in tumors. This Special issue provides an updated overview of the main molecular pathways modulated by onconutraceuticals, highlighting their potential role as support in oncological therapeutic strategies and underscoring the need for further preclinical and clinical studies to define their efficacy and safety.
