Pathological and Clinical Updates on Eye Diseases

Message from the Guest Editors

In recent years, the field of ophthalmology has witnessed remarkable advancements in the diagnosis and management of eye diseases, driven by innovations in gene therapy, cutting-edge imaging technologies, nanomedicine, molecular treatments, and other transformative approaches. These developments have enhanced our ability to address complex ocular conditions, including immune-mediated diseases, by integrating multidisciplinary strategies that bridge clinical and experimental insights. This Special Issue aims at deepening the understanding of the challenges posed by eye diseases and their diverse impacts on individual patients. It provides a platform for sharing and discussing the latest advancements in ophthalmological research and practice in a comprehensive and collaborative manner. We invite submissions of articles focusing on clinical and experimental research that significantly contribute to the diagnosis and treatment of ocular diseases, emphasizing the integration of multidisciplinary approaches and novel therapeutic strategies.
