New Horizons in Vision Science, Optometry and Ocular Surface

Message from the Guest Editors

Currently research in optometry and ocular surface covers fields ranging from binocular vision, accommodation, and ocular surface to contactology or refractive surgery. Ophthalmologists and optometrists need the latest and most up-to-date information available to improve their processes in daily clinical practice. However, on some occasions, daily care work does not allow time to review the latest developments in clinical optometry and ocular surface. Therefore, this Special Issue aims to share with professionals the latest news and new horizons in this discipline. Research is the present of our profession, and it must also be the future. This will enable us to achieve a more optimized clinical practice, as research is the result of our knowledge power and a source of new inspiration and progress. This Special Issue invites original research and review articles on recent achievements in advanced and clinical optometry and ocular innovative studies.
