Autoimmune Disorders: From Pathophysiology to Therapeutics

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue, “Autoimmune Disorders: From Pathophysiology to Therapeutics”, seeks to bring together cutting-edge research and expert reviews that delve into the intricate mechanisms driving autoimmunity and highlight innovative therapeutic strategies. We invite contributions that explore the genetic, epigenetic, and environmental factors influencing autoimmunity, novel biomarkers for diagnosis and disease monitoring, and state-of-the-art interventions, including biologics, small molecules, and immune-modulating therapies.

Our goal is to provide a platform for researchers and clinicians to share insights that advance the field, foster collaboration, and ultimately improve patient outcomes. By addressing both foundational and translational aspects of autoimmune disorders, this Special Issue aims to bridge the bench-to-bedside gap and pave the way for more effective and personalized treatment approaches.

We look forward to receiving your submissions and showcasing groundbreaking work in this critical field.
