Brain-Heart Connection: The Link between Cardiovascular Outcomes in Neuronal Disorders

Message from the Guest Editor

There is growing evidence that there are changes that spread beyond the brain in neuronal and psychological disorders. This Life special issue entitled "Brain-Heart Connection. The link between cardiovascular outcomes in neuronal disorders" will collect reviews and original articles of how cardiovascular function is augmented in neuronal disorders. We are particularly interested in reviews capable of covering a wide range of neuronal and psychological disorders. In addition, we seek original research articles that provide clinical and/or mechanistic insight into changes to the cardiovascular system in neuronal and psychological disorders. This special issue seeks to highlight what we know to date, as well as provide a space for emerging areas of research. The scope of the issue includes, but is not limited to: changes in autonomic tone, changes in excitability and arrhythmia risk, changes to developments of heart failure, and changes in cardiovascular biomarkers.
