Aspects of the Biology of Populations in Northern Africa and the Middle East

Message from the Guest Editors

The Middle East and Northern Africa (MENA) have long histories characterized by many remarkable innovations, ranging from the invention of agriculture to the development of great state-level societies. This Special Issue will focus broadly on the biological context of MENA and examines how it has shaped everyday life for human populations over time. Topics of interest include relationships between populations as reflected in genetics and skeletal/dental traits, the biodiversity of species, ecology, virology, and related subjects. Studies on contemporary issues should explore the relationships of present to past trends.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Life (ISSN 2075-1729) is an international, peer-reviewed open access journal that publishes scientific studies related to fundamental themes in life sciences. Some papers are published individually, while others are submitted for inclusion in special issues with guest editors. You are invited to contribute a research article, essay, or a review to be considered for publication.
