Spotlight on Veterinary Pathology and Toxicology

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue of Life titled “Spotlight on Veterinary Pathology and Toxicology” is dedicated to the study of animal diseases and their involvement in public health in the context of the concept of One Health and encompasses various aspects of pathology in domestic and wild animals and their involvement in public health, such as the following:

New challenges for veterinary pathology induced by climate change and the spread of tropical diseases;

Diseases caused by industrial toxins, environmental pollution, and mycotoxins;

Epidemiology of non-communicable diseases concerning environmental pollution.

This Special Issue also focuses on new developments in diagnosing and treating animal diseases and preventing their transmission to human beings or involvement in environmental contamination. Original manuscripts covering various aspects of veterinary pathology are requested. Papers reporting new solutions to common problems and new descriptions of lesser-recognized conditions are particularly welcome. In addition, we encourage papers detailing advanced diagnostic techniques, the use of microscopic anatomy in diagnosis, and computer modeling of pathological processes.
