New Trends in Otorhinolaryngology

Message from the Guest Editors

Research and innovation are two fundamental aspects in medicine. In otolaryngology and head and neck conditions, the identification of the causes as well as new methods of diagnosis and treatments are extremely relevant to improving outcomes and patient quality of life. This Special Issue aims to stimulate discussions among clinicians and researchers about new methods of diagnosis and innovative treatments. Both clinical and basic research papers will be accepted. We are interested in any type of innovation in otolaryngology, including otology and neurotology, cancer, facial plastic, general ENT, pediatric ENT, and maxilla facial surgery. We are interested in systematic reviews and metanalyses, medical hypotheses, and clinical trials.
