Advances in Substance Abuse and Addiction

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue, entitled “Advances in Substance Abuse and Addiction”, aims to collate original research, reviews, and meta-analysis about the current challenges and solutions for substance use disorders (including nicotine, alcohol, illicit, and prescription drugs), providing a valuable resource for researchers, clinicians, and policy makers in the addiction medicine field. The scope of this Special Issue includes neurochemical and pharmacogenetic mechanisms related to addiction prevention, treatment, and recovery process, with a focus on translational research (from bench to bedside and vice versa). Topics to be considered involve in vitro and in vivo investigations of the pharmacological and behavioral actions of the substance of abuse, addiction treatment, and prevention research in humans. The goal is to identify the emerging trends and unmet needs of people with substance use disorders and serve as a platform to connect industrial and academic communities with regulatory agencies as well as treatment facilities in the field of addiction medicine. Dr. Cynthia Wei Sheng Lee
