Computational Statistics and Data Analysis, 3rd Edition

Message from the Guest Editor

With the development of scientific techniques, computational statistics and data analysis have become more and more important in diverse areas of science, engineering, and humanities, ranging from genomics and health sciences to economics, finance, and machine learning. To analyze the real data in these fields, statistical methodologies and computing for data analysis are fundamental to statistical modeling and data analysis. In this Special Issue, we are looking for high-quality research papers in computational statistics and data analysis. We invite investigators to contribute original research articles as well as review articles that will stimulate the development of statistical methodology and applications concerning the data analysis.
