Management and Diagnosis of Infertility and Recurrent Abortions in Obstetrics and Gynecology

Message from the Guest Editors

Recurrent pregnancy loss and infertility are pressing issues that require urgent and sustained attention from the medical community, researchers, and the public. We can improve the lives of those affected by these conditions through education, research, comprehensive treatment protocols, and support systems. This Special Issue aims to create a holistic framework that addresses the medical aspects and acknowledges and supports the emotional journey of individuals and couples dealing with RPL and infertility. The primary objectives of this Special Issue are:

- Investigating and understanding recurrent pregnancy loss at the genetic or molecular level.
- Enhancing research efforts focused on the etiology and treatment options of RPL and infertility.
- Developing comprehensive, multidisciplinary treatment protocols that address these conditions' physical and emotional aspects.
- Understanding pregnancy complications and adverse outcomes related to infertility and RPL.
- Understanding male and female factors and their impact during ART.
- Understanding ectopic pregnancy and other complications in early pregnancy.
