Current and Future Trends in Dentistry and Oral Health

Message from the Guest Editors

The Special Issue “Current and Future Trends in Dentistry and Oral Health” emphasizes the role of digital innovations and artificial intelligence in improving diagnostic precision, treatment planning, and patient management. It also explores the development of biomaterials in restorative dentistry, periodontology, and prosthodontics with a focus on durability, esthetics, and biocompatibility. The papers published in this Special Issue will also contribute to advancements in orthodontics, such as clear aligner technology and minimally invasive methods, and preventive and pediatric dentistry, with individualized, minimally invasive approaches at the forefront. This Special Issue will further address the critical links between oral and systemic health, the growth of teledentistry in expanding patient access, and advancements in esthetic dentistry. Through original research and comprehensive reviews, this collection aims to present innovative, evidence-based insights that enhance clinical methodologies and improve patient outcomes in contemporary dental practice.
