Emergency Medicine and Emergency Room Medical Issues

Message from the Guest Editor

Hospitals or healthcare institutions are at risk of being overburdened, physicians are at risk of burnout, emergency departments are clogged up. All previous items are hot topics in the area of emergency medicine. For this reason, the daily clinical management of emergency medicine and emergency rooms recognizes great educational merit not only in case series but also in case reports. We invite colleagues around the world to report their clinical experience with case series or case reports in emergency medicine and/or emergency rooms for this collection of our journal in order to give support to this fundamental area of the daily life of hospital workers. Clinical contributions regarding acute illnesses, such as infections, thrombosis, bleeding, inflammation, autoimmune diseases, trauma and any type of emergency diagnostic rare procedure, are welcome for this collection.
