Liver Transplantation Today: Where We Are Now and Where We Are Going

Message from the Guest Editor

The journal Medicina is launching a Special Issue titled “Liver Transplantation Today: Where We Are Now and Where We Are Going” with the goal of bringing together current and forward-looking evidence on preparation, delivery, and follow-up in the context of liver transplantation. We are pleased to invite you and your co-workers to submit your original research articles that address unresolved issues in transplant and recipient health in the short and long term, recently resolved problems, critical revisions of existing concepts, and visions in the field of liver transplantation. We also encourage the submission of original manuscripts ranging from basic to clinical research and comprehensive reviews focusing on the technical aspects of organ preservation, rejection and tolerance, biliary tract diseases, and the recurrence of underlying disease and de novo oncology.
