Essential Oils in Human Health —2nd Edition

Message from the Guest Editors

Essential oils are generally of complex phytochemical composition, consisting of mono- and sesquiterpenoids in addition to aromatic derivatives. Due to their intrinsic properties, such as fragrance and therapeutic activities, essential oils are gaining tremendous attention and are used for many diverse applications in food and cosmetics, as well as in human health. Thanks to their potential biological activities and therapeutic properties, essential oils have medicinal applications and are used for several purposes, including aromatherapy, natural remedies and personal care. Considering their useful properties, essential oils have attracted increasing interest because of their potential beneficial effects on human health.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

As the premier open access journal dedicated to molecular chemistry, now in its 29th year of publication, the papers published in Molecules span from classical synthetic methodology to natural product isolation and characterization, as well as physicochemical studies and the applications of these molecules as pharmaceuticals, catalysts, and novel materials. Pushing the boundaries of the discipline, we invite papers on all major fields of molecular chemistry and multidisciplinary topics bridging chemistry with biology, physics, and materials science, as well as timely reviews and topical issues on cutting-edge fields in all of these areas.
