Latest Discoveries in Metalloproteins

Message from the Guest Editors

Metalloproteins are ubiquitous in nature and central to many key biological processes. With advancements in experimental and computational techniques, we are at a point where characterizing enzymatic structure, function, and design has greatly accelerated. To curate the latest discoveries in the fast-growing field of metalloproteins, we invite you to contribute an original research paper or review article in the following areas:

- Enzymatic catalysis;
- Inhibitor function and design;
- Electron transfer;
- Energy transfer;
- Protein function and design;
- Protein–nucleic acid interactions.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

As the premier open access journal dedicated to molecular chemistry, now in its 30th year of publication, the papers published in Molecules span from classical synthetic methodology to natural product isolation and characterization, as well as physicochemical studies and the applications of these molecules as pharmaceuticals, catalysts, and novel materials. Pushing the boundaries of the discipline, we invite papers on all major fields of molecular chemistry and multidisciplinary topics bridging chemistry with biology, physics, and materials science, as well as timely reviews and topical issues on cutting-edge fields in all of these areas.
