Advances in Dementia Nursing: Functional Health, Carer Experiences, and Culturally Inclusive Care Approaches

Message from the Guest Editor

The global rise in the prevalence of dementia challenges healthcare, caregivers, and societies, demanding innovative and inclusive care. For this Special Issue, “Advances in Dementia Nursing: Functional Health, Carer Experiences, and Culturally Inclusive Care Approaches”, we invite contributions that address the multifaceted nature of dementia care across settings and populations. We welcome empirical, theoretical, and review papers that explore functional health trajectories, the lived experiences of family and professional carers, and the implementation of culturally sensitive nursing practices. Of particular interest are studies focusing on refugees and culturally and linguistically diverse (CALD) older adults, who face unique barriers to timely diagnosis and equitable care. We encourage submissions employing quantitative, qualitative, or mixed methods that offer insights into assessment tools, care models, workforce education, and policy translation. By integrating global perspectives and multidisciplinary collaboration, this Special Issue will strengthen the evidence base for dementia nursing and advance person-centred, culturally responsive care for older people worldwide.
