Nutritional Strategies in Inflammatory Bowel Disease

Message from the Guest Editors

Nutritional therapy for inflammatory bowel disease (IBD) has been the subject of extensive research in recent years, resulting in the accumulation of substantial evidence highlighting the crucial connection between diet and gastrointestinal mucosal inflammation. Whether aimed at mitigating active inflammation, ameliorating functional symptoms or sustaining remission, scholars and practitioners in the field of nutritional therapy for IBD have been instrumental in instigating significant shifts in dietary practices for these patients. This Special Issue of Nutrients entitled “Nutritional Strategies in Inflammatory Bowel Disease” welcomes original research and reviews of the literature concerning this important topic.
