Nutritional Interventions for the Management of Inflammatory Bowel Disease

Message from the Guest Editors

The group of conditions known as inflammatory bowel disease (IBD) encompass Crohn's disease (CD), ulcerative colitis (UC) and IBD unclassified (IBDU). Dietary factors appear to contribute to the pathogenesis of these conditions and they are associated with various adverse nutritional consequences. The topics for this call for papers include, but are not restricted to:• The short- and long-term outcomes of nutritional interventions in individuals with active IBD;• The role of nutritional interventions in the maintenance of remission in individuals with IBD;• Factors that might predict or be valuable in enhancing the outcome of these interventions;• The mechanisms by which these nutritional interventions have their described outcomes;• Comparisons between different interventions and across different settings (such as geographical, cultural or other);• Interactions between these interventions and other medical or surgical interventions in individuals with IBD;• The attitudes and approaches to these interventions by healthcare professionals and individuals with IBD.
