Clinical Nutrition for Arterial Health

Message from the Guest Editor

Arterial diseases are the leading cause of deaths worldwide. In order to reduce the prevalence of this disease entity, primary prevention is key. This Special Issue on “clinical nutrition for arterial health” is focused on the role that clinical nutrition has on health of the arteries and arterial disease. Works on the association between clinical nutrition and coronary, carotid, cerebral, aortic and peripheral arterial occlusive and aneurysmal disease are welcomed. The intent of this issue is to broadly explore a wide range of nutrients and/or dietary patterns and their association with arterial health and disease.
