Nutrition, Immunity, and Neurological Diseases

Message from the Guest Editor

There is an increase in susceptibility to chronic and debilitating diseases with aging, and the extent of severe neurodegenerative conditions has been increasingly rapidly in the early years of the 21st century. Aging has proved to be modifiable, and so it could be for neurodegenerative conditions. We believe that the time is ripe to focus on to how nutrients and nutraceutical compounds can modulate the processes underlying age-related conditions and inflammatory response in immune disorders. Thus, we put forward the idea to collect a series of high-standard manuscripts that fit the objectives and the topics of this Special Issue and raise awareness among colleagues about how nutrients can limit or delay neuronal cell death and impact the inflammatory response and immunological status in human diseases. We also believe that more research studies are necessary in order to determine the underlying mechanisms of how these essential nutrients work in the prevention of cognitive decline and cell death. Therefore, both clinical and basic research will be considered in this Special Issue.
