Nutrition, Diet and Food Allergy

Message from the Guest Editor

I would like to invite you to contribute to this Special Issue -'Nutrition, Diet and Food Allergy' Different mechanisms are involved in food allergic diseases with distinctive clinical characteristics: IgE-mediated and non-IgE-mediated phenotypes will be distinguished in the Issue, considering the early recent literature on the prevalence, age of onset, follow-up recommendations and duration of food allergies. Moreover, the management of these fascinating diseases will be discussed with particular attention on nutritional hazards, risks of allergic reactions to new allergens, problems with missed labelling. Especially, the dietary restrictions and the re-introduction of allergens lead to a significant burden for affected patients, fear of accidental ingestions and related risk of severe reactions, resulting in a reduced quality of life among patients with food allergies. This Special Issue of Nutrients aims to collect an overview of the current body of evidence on the latest epidemiological, pathogenetic, and diagnostic findings on food allergies and the role of nutrition on the disease, in particular at pediatric age.
