Food Insecurity and Nutrition in a Disrupted World: Pandemics, Disasters, Conflicts and Food System Challenges

Message from the Guest Editors

The COVID-19 pandemic, natural disasters and conflicts have exposed cracks in the food system and increased the likelihood of food insecurity and other nutrition challenges. The triple burden of malnutrition (undernutrition, overnutrition and micronutrient deficiencies) increases the risk of preventable diet-related diseases and significantly impacts public health. We invite papers that explore the following interconnecting themes, original research (qualitative and quantitative), systematic and meta-analyses, and narrative reviews are welcome:

- Disaster response strategies related to food (preparation, response and recovery);
- A systems approach to food security;
- The role of food system actors in maintaining food security (government, non-government, private sector and community);
- Food assistance to address episodic or chronic food insecurity;
- Measuring and monitoring food assistance interventions (e.g., effectiveness, equity and efficiency);
- Health or other interventions to address malnutrition in all its forms;
- Reflections on how to protect food insecurity in an ever-changing world.
