

Special Issue

Cardiovascular Disease, Immune System and Nutrition

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue was proposed to clarify the immunotherapeutic approaches used in cardiovascular disease. Cardiovascular disease is one of the most common throughout the world. With the increase in life stress and the diversification of diet, more and more people, including younger groups, are vulnerable to it. It is well established that innate and adaptive immune responses have an essential role in the development and progression of many cardiovascular diseases. In recent years, significant progress in understanding the impact of diets and nutrient interventions on influencing the immune system and cardiovascular disease has been made. This Special Issue of Nutrients welcomes original research articles, animal and clinical studies, and review articles on the current state of research.
