Epigenetics and Nutritional Epidemiology of Metabolic Diseases

Message from the Guest Editor

Globally, the prevalence of metabolic diseases is very high, causing a great disease burden for individuals. An underlying mechanism of metabolic diseases may be chronic inflammation, which is closely related to dietary intake. However, there is a lack of extensive research on the relationship between metabolic diseases and nutritional epidemiology. With the rapid development of epigenetics and metabolic health in recent years, the complex interactions between epigenome and metabolic diseases need to be further explored. By focusing on the epigenetics and nutritional epidemiology of metabolic diseases, the journal aims to provide a theoretical basis for the prevention of metabolic diseases and contribute to the development of public health.
