Mosaic of Autoimmunity

Message from the Guest Editors

In the presence of primary individual hereditary predisposition, pathological autoimmunity can manifest differently under the influence of various exogenous adjuvants or, vice versa—immunosuppressive factors—interplaying at different life periods of an individual, while autoimmune disorders in the human body seem to flow from one nosological entity to another, keeping a similar background, which is a principle known as the “kaleidoscope of autoimmunity”. After the success of the first Special Issue of Pathophysiology [2022, 29(2)] dedicated to autoimmunity problems, we launch the new Special Issue, entitled “Mosaic of Autoimmunity”, which aims to attract both researchers and clinicians of various specialties, and contributions from leading scholars in this scientific area. We invite you to submit reviews, original papers, and case reports with pathophysiological commentaries.
