Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

The macula plays an important role in central vision; once the macula is impaired and not appropriately treated, visual deterioration will be serious. The advent of anti-VEGF drugs greatly changed the treatment strategy for macular diseases, including neovascular age-related macular degeneration, myopic choroidal neovascularization, retinal vein occlusion, and diabetic macular edema. This Special Issue will provide new concepts, regimens, and drugs for the treatment of macular diseases. I am looking forward to your submission.
