Interdisciplinary Approaches to Preventing and Treating Inflammatory and Oxidative Diseases with Medicinal Plants and Bioactive Compounds

Message from the Guest Editors

Using an interdisciplinary, holistic view, this Special Issue delves into preventing and intervening in inflammatory and oxidative diseases using medicinal plants and bioactive compounds. Uncontrolled inflammation and oxidative stress are detrimental to the body's homeostasis, leading to various diseases. Medicinal plants and phytochemicals may be more cost-effective and present few adverse events. promoting synergism with conventional therapies. However, medicinal plants and phytochemicals are not as well funded by various medical specialties and other professions. Therefore, the main aim of this Special Issue is to contribute to the existent foundation regarding the use of medicinal plants and phytochemicals against multiple diseases and health conditions, especially those diseases which oblige patients to attend various medical specialties and professions, offering to you, erudite Authors, the challenge of proposing special studies in the field to promote a healthier, less-diseased future. We welcome original research studies and review articles. Translational research in the field is also welcome.
