Molecular Insights and Clinical Implications in Geriatric Medicine and Drug Development

Message from the Guest Editors

Population aging is reshaping healthcare. Longer life brings the “Geriatric Giants”—malnutrition, falls, cognitive loss and incontinence—plus multimorbidity and polypharmacy, elevating drug–drug and nutrient–drug risks. Rapid, precise diagnostics are essential: biomarkers and advanced laboratory tests enable earlier detection, individualized therapy and better outcomes. Innovative pharmacology must respect late-life physiology. This Special Issue invites high-quality original research and reviews addressing the medical and pharmacological complexities of aging, especially:

- clinical use of biomarkers in geriatric assessment;
- discovery, modelling and development of novel therapeutics for older adults, from bench to regulatory approval.

Join us in advancing geriatric medicine and pharmacy—submit your work and help shape healthy aging.
