Chitosan Based Novel Pharmaceutical Dosage Forms and Drug Delivery Systems

Message from the Guest Editors

In recent years, a research interest focuses on smart chitosan-based carriers able for more accurate control of drug distribution in target tissues and/or drug release under specified conditions (pH, enzyme, temperature, light, ultrasound, magnetism, pressure, electric fields), which are favorable for optimization of therapeutical efficacy and reduction of side effects. At the same time, several challenges need to be overcome on the way to clinical validation of these strategies. This Special Issue aims to collect reviews that consider the current state of the art and future prospects in the field of chitosan-based formulations and drug delivery systems, as well as original research articles reflecting recent research efforts in this area.
