Inflammation-Targeted Nanomedicines for the Treatment of Chronic Inflammatory Diseases and Cancer

Message from the Guest Editors

This Pharmaceutics Special Issue is dedicated to exploring nanotechnology-based delivery systems targeting the inflammatory niche that characterizes chronic inflammatory diseases and cancer. Recent advances in nanomedicine have enabled the development of targeted, sustained, and responsive therapeutic platforms with the potential to overcome the limitations of conventional treatments. As , we would like to encourage colleagues to submit their research work in the format of full papers or pertinent reviews, from diverse fields such as immunology, oncology, pharmaceutical sciences, nanomedicine and regenerative medicine, to develop innovative research that advances the clinical translation of next-generation therapies for chronic inflammatory disorders and cancer. We look forward to your contributions.
