Pharmaceutical Solids: Advanced Manufacturing and Characterization

Message from the Guest Editor

Pharmaceutical solids play a pivotal role in drug development and delivery. Advanced manufacturing and characterization techniques are indispensable for ensuring the quality, safety, effectiveness, and swift time-to-market of these products. In recent times, significant progress has been made in the realm of pharmaceutical solid manufacturing and characterization, resulting in enhanced drug formulations, delivery systems, and overall patient well-being. Novel manufacturing and characterization technologies hold the potential to optimize pharmaceutical production and offer advantages to patients. However, the widespread adoption of these innovative pharmaceutical manufacturing technologies has encountered obstacles, as stakeholders highlight potential barriers to their implementation. This Special Issue, titled "Pharmaceutical Solids: Advanced Manufacturing and Characterization", aims to showcase the cutting-edge advancements in all facets of pharmaceutical solids manufacturing and characterization. The goal is to introduce new tools that address drug shortages and other challenges, ultimately contributing to improved pharmaceutical quality.
