Advances in Controlled Delivery of Therapeutic Biomacromolecules

Message from the Guest Editors

Currently, therapeutic macromolecules are popular for the treatment of several diseases. Enzymes, proteins, peptide-based actives or genetic material are being investigated in terms of action, yet the special characteristics of these type of actives could be an issue for their delivery to the therapeutic target. Over the last few decades, one of the goals of drug delivery science has been to develop systems able to host and maintain the activity of these molecules. This Special Issue, entitled “Advances in Controlled Delivery of Therapeutic Biomacromolecules”, aims to present the current state of the art of the field. Emphasis is placed on novel platforms and materials for their delivery through any administration route, highlighting the most challenging aspects of modern biopharmaceutical science. We invite research scientists from the pharmaceutical industry or academia to submit original research articles, review articles with a focus on novel therapeutic biomolecule delivery systems.
