Gene Therapy for Neurological Disease

Message from the Guest Editors

Gene therapy is emerging as an exciting therapeutic strategy, not only for rare monogenic diseases, for which gene replacement is the main goal, but also for a wide range of neurodegenerative disorders with complex pathogenesis, for which gene delivery of novel therapeutic targets is a promising approach. Several drugs are now accessing the market and facilitating the development of new approaches and new routes of delivery to better target the central and peripheral nervous system. In this Special Issue, we want to review the current status of gene therapy for neurodegenerative disorders, present the last results in the field with all kind of approaches (including in vivo or ex vivo gene therapy), and also review emerging next-generation technologies.
