Excipients in the Design and Development of Pharmaceutical Formulations

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue highlights the crucial role of excipients in pharmaceutical formulations. Excipients are non-active ingredients that significantly affect the stability, bioavailability, manufacturability, and overall performance of pharmaceutical products. The Issue will explore the latest advancements in excipient selection, design, and optimization across various dosage forms, including oral, injectable, topical, and novel drug delivery systems.

Topics of interest include the development of novel excipients with enhanced properties, their regulatory considerations, and strategies for improving drug solubility, stability, and release profiles. It will also cover patient-friendly formulations and the role of excipients in personalized medicine. Contributions focused on biologics, advanced drug delivery systems, and green chemistry in formulations are welcome.

This Special Issue aims to provide insights into the evolving role of excipients in the development of effective, safe, and innovative pharmaceutical products.
