Novel Therapeutic Approaches for Neurodegenerative Diseases Treatment

Message from the Guest Editors

Neurodegenerative disorders are typically characterized by the progressive loss of specific populations of neurons in the brain. Despite recent advances in the field, most of the molecular mechanisms involved in disease progression are not completely understood.

However, since protein aggregation is a central event in neurological disorders, a variety of novel approaches are focused on developing novel pharmacologically active molecules targeting this process. Without doubt, such ground-breaking discoveries will facilitate the structure-based design of novel functional and specific protein aggregation inhibitors. Additionally, we focus on nanomaterials targeting neurodegenerative disorders as efficient drug delivery systems. The focus of this Special Issue is on the development and identification of novel molecules and therapeutic approaches dedicated to treat neurodegenerative diseases. The topics include but are not limited to: the design and development of novel protein-aggregation inhibitors; drug delivery using nanotechnology; and the development and characterization of pharmacologically active compounds targeting proteostasis and neurodegeneration
