Pharmacoeconomics and Outcomes Research: A Burgeoning Arena for Decision Making and Health Policy

Message from the Guest Editors

Colliding challenges of increasingly expensive treatments, aging populations, and decelerating growth in life expectancy now confront clinicians and decision-makers. There is a pressing need for insights informed by pharmacoeconomics and outcomes research to gauge clinical approaches, system-level interventions, and population-level policy development. Guiding quality care that incorporates the conservation of increasingly fixed resources is necessary. For this Special Issue “Pharmacoeconomics and Outcomes Research: A Burgeoning Arena for Decision Making and Health Policy,” we invite you to contribute original research, systematic reviews, meta-analyses, short reports, economic analyses, case studies, and commentaries salient to Pharmacoeconomics and Outcomes Research.
