Editorial Board Members' Collection Series: Polymer Physics and Theory

Message from the Guest Editors

We are pleased to announce this Collection titled "Editorial Board Members' Collection Series: Polymer Physics and Theory", which will be a collection of papers invited for publication by the Editorial Board Members. This Special Issue is designed to publish high-quality review or article papers dealing with the different issues covered by the journal. The scope of this Special Issue includes, but is not limited to:

- The development of multiscale modeling methodologies, constitutive equations, and new theories;
- The implementation of efficient algorithms and machine learning schemes for structure–property relationship quantification;
- Experimental studies for the preparation and characterization of new polymeric materials, including instrumentation and the development of new measuring devices;
- Developments in view of potential applications in batteries, memory devices, and solar energy;
- Sustainability challenges: polymer materials designed for waste management (bio-based, linear, and crosslinked).
