Latest Progress in the Additive Manufacturing of Polymeric Materials

Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleague, Additive technology has emerged in recent years as a major technology in the manufacturing process of polymer-based materials. Existing prototyping technologies have been updated and greatly expanded in terms of materials, product size, and fabrication speed, aiming to uncover all advantages of a fully digital manufacturing process. This Special Issue is focused on papers addressing technological developments towards digital manufacturing systems, including biomaterials, design, new materials, manufacturing technologies, digital twin technology, machine learning, and other optimisation procedures. New applications of additive manufacturing are particularly welcome.
