Polymer Electrolyte: Recent Progress and Applications (2nd Edition)

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue of the journal Polymers, entitled “Polymer Electrolytes: Recent Progress and Applications,” aims to bring together papers focused on the recent progress and applications of polymer electrolyte materials concerning optical properties, electrochemical properties, and mechanical properties. These polymeric electrolytes are mainly for energy, optoelectrochemical, building, and automobile applications. The process and progress to assemble them are also included in this issue. We aim to cover but are not limited to the fields of solar cells, electrochromic devices, batteries, fuel cells, supercapacitors, actuators, and sensors. Thus, we want to highlight the efforts of researchers who have contributed to recent development in those fields based on polymer electrolytes as the aim of this Special Issue.
